Ukrainian soldiers' enjoy Adelaide stopover before back to war

Sam Lowe

Watching children sing and dance at Adelaide's Ukrainian Independence Day concert on Sunday, Lieutenant Colonel Andrii Berezovskyi "was supposed to smile" but instead "had tears rolling down my face".

It was the 30-year-old's second visit to South Australia, but in a week's time he will be back on the frontline.

Colonel Berezovskyi, a Ukraine Armed Forces soldier, has spent almost four years in trenches surrounded by "dead friends and Russian soldiers".

"The worst thing for me was to lie in a trench together with a dead Russian soldier, he was there for about two to three weeks," he said.

"When I was lying there next to him I was asking, 'why did you come here?'. I told him, 'you're already dead, and I'm going to get killed right beside you'."

Colonel Berezovskyi and Colonel Mykola Fedkalov travelled to Australia a week ago to update members of the government about the ongoing Ukrainian conflict.

They have also visited Ukrainian communities across Australia and joined in on Adelaide's Ukrainian Independence Day celebrations.

Colonel Fedkalov, 37, heads the Odessa state emergency service, and said it was "very positive" to see South Australia's Ukrainian community celebrating.

"I like the fact that despite many generations, Ukrainians are upholding Ukrainian traditions here," he said.

"They're raising their children, grandchildren and are passing on that love for Ukraine that they have," he said.
